Scientific Advisory Committee

JACOB LIVINGSTON SLOSSER is currently an Assistant Professor at iCourts – The Danish National Research Foundation’s Centre of Excellence for International Courts at the University of Copenhagen Law Faculty. Jacob’s research sits at the intersection of law, technology and cognitive science. He specializes in the application of cognitive linguistics to legal texts focusing on how changes in linguistic framing affects interpretation particularly in legal responses to artificial intelligence in Public International Law. His externally funded projects have covered the design and implications of hybrid legal intelligence systems for administrative and human rights law, as well as society at large. A highly interdisciplinary scholar, Jacob’s work and interests span a broad range of fields that cover the phenomena of meaning making, technology, and human behaviour. His work has been invited for inclusion on advisory committees on AI for NGOs, international projects on cognitive legal theory and legal linguistics, interdisciplinary conferences in cognitive science, and workshops for PhD schools, among others.
