MIRIANA GRECO is a graduate student at the Department of Legal Sciences (School of Law) of the University of Salerno (Italy). Her research area of interest focuses on international and European criminal law, with particular attention to the protection of human rights in the context of armed conflict.

She is currently writing a thesis on “The right to food and armed conflicts and starvation as a war crime”, in which she analyses the legal implications of intentional deprivation of food as a weapon of war. This theme reflects one of the most serious and current challenges for the protection of human dignity.
